

Traveling by train

- There is one general remark for coming to Leuven by train.
 - Be sure you don't take a train to "Louvain-la-Neuve", those will lead you to the U.C.Louvain instead of to KU Leuven. To make it more confusing, when the Belgian railways talk about Leuven in French speaking or bilingual areas, they use Louvain. If they talk about Louvain-la-Neuve, they always mention the full name.
- If you arrive in Brussels South Station by a high speed train (Eurostar, TGV, Thalys), you can take a direct train to Leuven. Cost € 5.40
- People coming from the Netherlands by Antwerp might find it easier changing in Antwerp or Mechelen, depending on the type of train (Thalys or international train).
- People coming from Germany by high speed train might find it easier changing in Liège (Guillemins) and taking a direct train to Leuven from there onwards.
- For more information about the train hours, please visit the site of the www.b-rail.be